HTCA-102-01 Art Since 1945 Lauren MacDonald

Tu Th 9:00AM - 12:00PM Room: 16A

This course traces the history of art from the 1950s to the present, examining works in conjunction with the social, political, and philosophical events that inform and are touched by them. Particular attention will be paid to the shifting nature of the art object; the relation between art and the political (broadly defined), artists' engagement with the institutional structures of their production and display, and the shifts in representational practice signaled by postmodernist and postcolonial theories. In all of these arenas, we will think together about how histories get written, artists get celebrated, consistency gets produced, and at what cost.

Tu Th 9:00AM - 12:00PM Room: 18

Current studies of the impacts of digital technology show that this "reinvention" has had varied success in living up to its spectacular promises. This course will survey the history of computer science and the Internet alongside the speculative fictions and actual cultural transformations produced by digital technologies. Students will be studying how computers work and how they work upon us by studying examples from art, popular culture, and current research about the impact computer designs and digital networking have on how we imagine and inhabit contemporary life. Topics include: computer science, technology studies, the Internet, cyborgs, memory, artificial intelligence, electronic waste, virtual realities, digital art/new media.

What should we do with cloth and pigment? It's an old question but interesting answers lie equally in the history of painting and the history of textiles. In this class students will investigate the political and cultural utility of painting and textile traditions while pursuing individual practices that include or reference the worlds of paint and fabric. Considering painting and textiles together as one history of material culture integrates the cultural production of women into "art history". Through practice we can re-imagine this history. Students will learn textile techniques that are compatible with painting practice including piecing, thread pulling, appliqué, dyeing and embroidery. We will pretend that these techniques have never been valued separately or differently from stretching canvas, mixing paint, glazing or varnishing, which skills we will also practice and tune to each individual. CS-500S-01 Schizocuration: Productions of Space, Desire, and Politics Frederick Young

M W 9:00AM - 12:00PM Room: 3LH

This seminar will explore emergent notion of Schizocuration as an intersection with productions of space, desire, and politics. "Schizocuration" refers to the crucial work of Deleuze and Guattari on the questions of "schizoanalysis" merged with artistic curation. Since "curation" is vital for the artist, gallery and public space, we will deconstruct this word to rethink our relationships to art and our surroundings. Using this starting point, our readings will include (post)psychoanalytic concepts of desire as well as, the production of space-as-political. Our readings will draw off of Marxist, post-structuralist, feminist, queer theory, and post-colonialist thinkers, among others. As theorists and artists, we will critically work through both our textual canvas as well as the limit-case of current San Francisco to open up new modalities of schizocuration as artwork, as a performance of 'self', subjectivity, and the 'subjectile' as both singular and collective bodies of resistance. With these crucial 20th and 21st texts, we'll mobilize theoretical-aesthetic interventions into the flows of capitalist landscapes. In our words, we'll ask how to "curate" art, politics and ourselves in our modernity.

Professionals from the gallery, museum and other fields will be invited to the class to share their expertise with the students. Artists will be invited to talk about their professional experiences, their triumphs and their struggles. Students will be responsible to prepare lectures, artist statements, resume, apply to artist residencies, and two critiques introducing their practice at the beginning and end of the semester. GR-549-01 Installation Art Jill Miller
M W 1:00PM - 6:45PM Room: 10
This course will focus on installation art, site specificity, and interventionist strategies. By looking beyond the discreet art object, we will examine the expanded space or site. This course is primarily studio-based and will focus on large and small-scale installation work. In addition, students will be expected to complete readings, present artist profiles, and engage texts in a dialogic, critical manner. Student work will engage the physical landscape, exploring the relationship between object and space. Projects include: installing art work in multiple sites to see how it changes and responds to different locations, working both indoor and outdoor, and experimenting with time-based media by addressing installations as fragments or artifacts of performances. Students are expected to formulate and execute a new body of work, participate in class discussions and critiques, and research artists and artworks related to the course. Most importantly, students are expected to work with curiosity and great enthusiasm, feeling brave and sometimes vulnerable as they experiment in new and different areas. This class is ideal for anyone who wishes to push their studio boundaries by experimenting with different making strategies and working in unfamiliar territory.

HTCA-520X-01 Exchanges: Economies, Practices, Politics, People Laura Richard

Tu 9:00AM - 12:00PM Room: 3LH

This hybrid online/onsite art history course will explore the varying registers, structures, and implications of exchange within the production and distribution of aesthetic[ized] practices. We will consider the ways in which works from across time and geography have been made manifest and gain visibility and value through the exchanges and economies of collaboration, outsourcing, barter, reputation, finance, word-of-mouth, criticism, and gift. The thinking of Arendt, Becker, Bishop, Bourriaud, Bryan-Wilson, Butler, de Certeau, Deutsche, Hyde, Jackson, Kester, Lacy, Lefebvre, Levi-Strauss, Marx, Mauss, Moten, Purves, Simmel, Sontag and Strother will inform our investigations into the valence, labor, use-value, circulation, and market valuations of diverse modes of visual production. Australian aboriginal painting, French affichisme, American minimal sculpture and dance, Brazilian Pop, African masks, Chilean performance art, New Genres and the global Post-Studio movement will set the stage for analysis of the ethical, political and fiscal economies of recent installation art, relational aesthetics, activism, and social practices. A series of online readings and discussions beginning in mid-May will prepare us to actively participate in the SFAI Summer Symposium which will be organized around the topic of "party politics." The discussion threads from the symposium will shape our remaining classes; because of the early online preparatory phase, we will meet only once (instead of twice) a week for the eight-week session.
